Governor Bill Richardson to Hold Office Hours in Santa Fe and Albuquerque

SANTA FE - Governor Bill Richardson announced today that he will be holding open office hours in Santa Fe and Albuquerque on the next two Fridays to give New Mexicans an opportunity to sit down and meet with him.

The Governor will grant five-minute meetings on a first-come, first-served basis. Because the Governor has held several rounds of office hours around the state recently, he will only meet with those New Mexicans who haven't had a chance to sit down with him in the past six months request meetings during the upcoming office hours.

Those seeking time with Governor Richardson must have a valid New Mexico driver's license with them. People needing help resolving problems should bring the proper documentation. The Governor will not grant meetings with anyone who has a formal grievance or lawsuit pending with the state.
